Although outhit nearly two to one, the Nationals outgeneraled and outplayed the enemy in every other department, showing considerable more class than in the two games in which the Browns forced pions, striking out ten men and not giving them to be content with the short end of the score. Barring misplays, the final werdict should have been 1 to 0 in favor of the locals. The first run came in the fourth, when Ganley, after hitting, scored on Anderson's single; but Lave Cross was safe when Yeager fumbled his grounder and worked around as far as third on Big John's clout, and waitzed home on Howell's wild pitch. The ball went only a few feet back of the catcher, but he could not find it until Cross had reached

Aside from these misplays, the game was a battle between Case Patten and handsome Harry Howell, with honors about even. Although he was touched up for eight singles and a double, Patten kept the hits spread through eight innings, and was afforded the finest sort of support by his teammates. After giving a fine exhibition of stick-tolitiveness on Thursday, when his weak knee was in such shape that he was hardly able to hobble around to his position, Charley Hickman was compelled to give up yesterday. John Anderson was placed at first, and Nill, who has not yet entirely recovered from the spiking he received the other day, went to left field. Both mere played good hall.

Both men played good ball.

The first near-run of the game came in the first half of the fourth, when the Browns got Yeager as far as third, but he diad, as there were already two out, and the next hitter fouled to Warner. With one down in the sixth, Yezger doubled to right in the sixth, Yeager doubled to right center and moved up on Tom Jones' fly, but died. In the eighth, after Hemphill had skied, Wallace walked, and made second while Stone was being thrown out. Yeager lifted a fly to deep right, which Ganley got under, but the ball flew out of his hands, and Wallace made the visitors' only run. Charley Jones' triple, after two were down in the eighth, went to waste. The Official Score.
